It is strange to think how, in spite of so many young artists now playing with digital aesthetics, it was actually Warhol who saw it coming most clearly. The massive shift from depth to surface that Warhol explained with celebrity culture and advertising has now taken hold of language itself and spread across the planet. It’s no wonder that since the 1990s the political, social, and economic aspects of artistic production have become increasingly interchangeable and hard to distinguish from one another.

Product Number: 030-58256114

Genre: Poetry

Paperback: 529 pages

Description: Experimental poetry

Synopsis:

Jim Leftwich says of his book, Myesis: Doubt* made Myesis possible. beyond that, my time spent writing Doubt made my writing of Myesis necessary. --- I thought at the time i could write a text the reading of which would certainly change a reader. Myesis was to be that text. i would still like to think this, but it's much harder now than it was in 97. writing Doubt changed me, and writing Myesis even more so. i know what writing this way can do. i don't know what reading this kind of writing might do. --- knowing this, and what follows here, might assist in an understanding of Doubt. beyond that, Myesis in many ways will likely replicate Doubt as a reading experience, and though it is more calculated and complex, it is probably much less successful as a text. From the publisher: DOUBT*, long out-of-print, established Leftwich as a major experimental writer. His work is at the same time, poetic, philosophical, prose poem, and, most of all, a world to enter where imagination paves the way for self-discovery. MYESIS continues that text.

Teatime
Psychedelic Musings from the Center of the Universe

The Terence McKenna Thing
teafaerie | Musings | Tuesday, October 30th, 2012

I think that Terence was actually very courageous to stop when he did. I mean, does anybody actually believe that it somehow would have been more honorable if he had kept on taking drugs for egotistical reasons and then ended up burning out and cracking up in a messy and theatrical meltdown that totally would have endangered the entire mission? That would have been the far greater tragedy, I think. So under the circumstances I feel like he made the right decision for all concerned. He found the brake pedal and used it to take the break that he needed. Others who were perhaps neither so wise nor so lucky have pressed on to discover their actual breaking points and subsequently ended up throwing a bunch of distorted shadows over all of the intelligent things that they ever said.

Then there's the thing about Terence experiencing profound doubt about the validity of his own mythos. But most of the things that I have to say about that essentially boil down to: "WELL, DUH."

Frankly it's the people who actually do seem to believe in their own raps that scare the pants off of me. Terence McKenna was openly opposed to the whole notion of belief itself as a matter of general principle. He thought that it was beneath our collective dignity to stoop to the level of believing in things at all, mainly because the nature of the universe is inherently far too paradoxical and self-contradictory to be adequately described. He was constantly telling people that he was merely a philosophical entertainer, and that they should take everything that he said with an industrial-sized salt lick. He said that most of his theories were ever-evolving, and in the end he mainly considered them to be pieces of cognitive art that were intended to amuse, and perhaps to inspire a yet more nuanced and complex discussion about these things. He never said that he thought that they were God's own truth. He even came right out and said that he had absolutely no idea what's going on at all, that it's impossible to tell from our default vantage point, and that the only thing that he truly held as an article of faith was that the core of the Mystery was literally going to turn out to be something much stranger and more wonderful than our tiny minds are presently capable of imagining.

The shaman's job is to take in raw experience and then to excrete it in an intellectually accessible format. Terence McKenna was a masterful storyteller, but the Storyteller is also the Trickster. He or she is the divine liar who points out well-hidden truths through a subtle form of misdirection. I mean, how does one go about expressing something that literally cannot be put into words because it's fundamentally irrational? What do you do when the experience that you're trying to convey happens to entirely transcend all of the categories of rational thought upon which the fundamental assumptions of your language are inherently (and perhaps necessarily) dependent?

This is a trick question, and Terence quite naturally responded to it with a trick answer: You simply surround the truth with a loose patchwork of mutually exclusive metaphors. And then you TELL people that they're just metaphors and you try to get them to hold as many of them in their minds at the same time as they possibly can.

AND, at the given moment of possible creation to act only out of necessity. In other words, I am principally concerned with revelation. -- letter to Sitney, 1963

Europe, weighted down so much with that past, was THE DEAD. I was always Tourist there; I couldn't live in it. The graveyard could stand for all my view of Europe, for all the concerns with past art, for involvement with symbol. THE DEAD became my first work, in which things that might very easily be taken as symbols were so photographed as to destroy all their symbolic potential. The action of making THE DEAD kept me alive. (1960)

...in photographing this ash tray for instance, I'm sitting for hours to get 30 seconds of film. I'm sitting watching what's happening and clicking a frame, and sitting and watching, and further than that, I had shot several hundred feet and they seemed dead. They didn't reflect at all my excitement and emotion and feeling. They had no anima in them, except for two or three shots where the lens which was on a tripod, pressed against the desk, had jerked. Those were just random, but what gave me the clue. What I began doing was always holding the camera in hand. For hours. Clicking. Waiting. Seeing what the sun did to the scene. As I saw what was happening in the frame to these little particles of light, changing, I would shoot the camera very slightly. If you want to know how slightly you have to realize I was never photographing in an area bigger than this fourth fingernail. You couldn't tap the camera. It had to be moved by a quivering attention of the hand. That took maybe 13 or 14 moves over a period of ten minutes. Then to get that in mind: what it was doing and changing and how I was dancing with it had to be extended in memory; one, how would that come out at 24 frames a second and two, as to, was the dance real? --on the making of The Text of Light (1974)

I now no longer photograph, but rather paint upon clear strips of film – essentially freeing myself from the dilemmas of re-presentation. I aspire to a visual music, a "music" for the eyes (as my films are entirely without sound-tracks these days). Just as a composer can be said to work primarily with "musical ideas," I can be said to work with the ideas intrinsic to film, which is the only medium capable of making paradigmatic "closure" apropos Primal Sight. A composer most usually creates parallels to the surroundings of the inner ear – the primary thoughts of sounds. I, similarly, now work with the electric synapses of thought to achieve overall cathexis paradigms separate from but "at one" with the inner lights, the Light, at source, of being human. --on his painted/scratched films (1996)

Jim Leftwich it was referred to the committee on general laws on december 19, 2014. then, it was assigned to a subcommittee on general laws, on january 28, 2015. the next day the subcommittee tabled it, by voice vote (tabled, definition: In the United States, to table usually means to lay [the topic] on the table or to move for postponement of consideration; a proposal to suspend consideration of a pending motion.). this decision is what anyone should have expected, given the governor's vow to veto the bill if it ever reached his desk. so, yes, this bill has been proposed, but it has gone nowhere. the contrast with what has happened in indiana could hardly be any clearer.

Getting ready for an IEP next week. If this doesn't go well, I'm packing it up and moving to where most of my best friends are. (Yes, most of them seem to be migrating to one city.) I could actually regain my sanity, have people to make art with, and E could be socialized around people that actually talk To him, are loving, understanding, and all around great people. (Most happen to be teachers come to think of it...)
It would be a lot of work, and I would miss this place, but worth it in many ways.
So tired of fighting for everything.

Bela Grimm Andrew IEP stands for Individualized Education Program. In short its a summary, an overview of what is happening at school currently and what will be worked on next. Some of it makes sense to me and some of it is redundant. I'm tired of redundant. More importantly E doesn't work well with redundant.

Bela Grimm Dawn Woodward I hope it won't come to that but I'm ready for it. I been through this a few times now. They sent home a draft of the IEP last week, and I'm so glad. I would have been so gobsmacked by a couple comments, and confused by unnecessary fluff, that I wouldn't have been able to focus on what needs to be worked on.

Bela Grimm E would be home schooled, and better for it. E would learn more listening to people discuss and debate in a friendly light atmosphere than he could at any school. VA services and special needs programs are some of the lowest scoring in the country. Jim Leftwich here's what the VA governor said about a similar bill here:
“In a new Virginia economy, we need to be able to attract the best and brightest entrepreneurs here, build a workforce for the 21st century, and ensure that the next generation of Virginians has greater opportunity to succeed,” said McAuliffe. “All that depends on having a business-friendly environment where every Virginian is treated equally and fairly under the law, no matter their background, gender or whom they love.” as john said, it is not the small businesses we have to worry about.

just now: searching for old issues of Transmog, stumbled upon this, by Bob Grumman:
LOST & FOUND TIMES (#37, November 1996), Luna Bisonte Prods, 137 Leland Ave., Columbus OH 43214. 56 pp., $6. Ackerman's in prime form here as "Ralph '$50,000 Party' Delgado" reporting on Ackerman's first meeting with John M. Bennett, an ambulance driver who steals his patients' clothes, then sells them back to them at his house while spouting lines like, "Christ, you river rubes make me think of napkins milking stains to sneeze a thought twat at master slurping . . ." Contraesthetically, the issue boasts numerous Jim Leftwich poems, including a set of textual super-imposings that starts with "bosos" on top of itself in such a way as to suggest "bios," "bosom" and "blossoms." No room to say more about this always alarmingly-off-both-ends-of-the- absurdity/sublimity-continuum circus of a zine.
